In the Transepts and Nave are some of the finest statuary that human eye ever rested upon, v, me of which are of marvellous size. In the Carriage department are carriages of elegant workmanship, constructed of the very best materials, but in their construction about three times the amount of wood and iron is used that is used by carriage makers in this country, which gives them to the eye of an American resident a very clumsy and cumbersome appearance. I certainly saw no necessity for such waste...
